Q: Joomla 3 AddOn: Change joomla settings I have found this AddOn to change some settings to joomla 3.x, however there is not specific instructions for installing, any hint? A: If you are running a J3 site, you can just click on the download and unzip files in the root of your Joomla root directory (e.g. and restart it. You can see the details in the docs for Package and Component Management. You will then find the settings under the Joomla menu -> Global Configuration in joomla Administrator. You can also see a small change I've made to it at or checkout the source. Update There's a new AddOn to do exactly this that I just discovered - Update 2 This has just been released as a third party extension - Update 3 J3.3 and later have the preference to show this in the main Administrator link A polymer electrolyte fuel cell (PEFC) has a structure that an electrolyte membrane is sandwiched between an anode and a cathode to provide cells as power generation members. In the PEFC, oxygen, hydrogen, and air are supplied to the anode, the cathode, and the catalyst layer, respectively, and then an electric current is generated by an electrochemical reaction at the catalyst layer. The electrolyte membrane used in the PEFC is required to have an ionic conductivity high enough to discharge a proton and a lower electrical resistance than that of a proton conducting material used in a fuel cell. The electrolyte membrane is required to be resistant to the temperature at which electric power is generated. Specifically, the electrolyte membrane is required to have a high thermal stability to the durability and an activity of the electrolyte membrane in order to prevent the damaging of the electrolyte membrane by heat generated during the operation of the fuel cell. Among the electrolyte membranes, for example, it is possible to

Coffee percolation with non-cooperative adsorption Abstract Coffee percolation is a random media process with a three-dimensional Euclidean lattice geometry in which particles (coffee) with a given diameter can fill the available space. In this paper, we study the effect of wall repulsion on the criticality of the percolation transition in lattice structures. We consider a lattice structure whose sites are occupied by either coffee or water. The probability that a site is occupied by coffee is π and the probability that it is occupied by water is $1-\pi$. Since water is an immiscible, non-adhesive fluid, we study only the case when $\pi > 0$. Let $\delta(\pi)$ denote the fraction of sites occupied by water. We show that $\delta(\pi)$ is given by a solution to a functional equation of a Fredholm type. We derive the exact expression for $\delta(\pi)$ in two cases: (i) The dimensions of the lattice structure are 1, 2 and 3, (ii) The dimensions are 2, 3 and 4. For a particular form of the lattice structure, we present numerical results that indicate the validity of the mean-field behavior. Item Type: MPRA Paper Original Title: Coffee percolation with non-cooperative adsorptionBest action camera for underwater photography Selecting the best action camera for under water photography If you have been on an underwater expedition for some time, you would have probably discovered that your action camera is not so reliable and often slips out of your hands into the water when you are filming a scene. If you are a serious underwater photographer, this can be catastrophic for several reasons: The underwater camera is not waterproof and you need to carry it in a special bag with a connection to your camcorder to transmit the footage; It is more complicated to film underwater video with two different camera rigs; You need a reliable method to transmit the footage while you are filming; After you have shot the footage, you are now left with a camera that is not safe for the water and you need to transport it safely. It is therefore essential that you invest in a high-quality waterproof action camera. When looking for the best action camera for underwater photography you should ask yourself the following questions: What is the camera for?
