Impact of a "cultural safety" intervention on learners' encounters with cultural differences. Culturally diverse learners feel that they experience barriers to studying medicine in their own settings and are therefore often reluctant to enroll. Currently, no intervention exists that addresses racial/ethnic and cultural barriers to medical education. A culturally safe, video-based intervention, culturally informed medical education (CIME), has been developed to enhance the learning of students in a racially/ethnically diverse urban medical school. The authors describe (1) the effects of a curriculum employing CIME on preclinical course scores of first-year students, and (2) the effects of CIME on students' self-rated comfort and confidence to deal with members of different racial/ethnic backgrounds. After completing a pre-CIME questionnaire, students participated in two, hour-long, video-based CIME sessions. Pre- and postintervention questionnaires assessing their comfort and confidence were administered to all students entering the first year of the medical school in 2008, and additional data were collected during the 2009 and 2010 preclinical years. In all three classes, racial/ethnic categories were standardized, using 10 racial/ethnic groups to ensure differences were observed. Of the 239 preintervention first-year students, 120 (50%) were Black, 70 (29%) were Latino/Hispanic, 30 (12%) were White, 10 (4%) were Asian, and 9 (4%) were other. Compared to those who did not participate in the CIME program, first-year students who watched at least one video participated in the CIME program and demonstrated higher course scores on Objective Structured Clinical Examinations (1.8, P 3e33713323
