Traveller Level B2 Student's Book (Level B2 Teacher's Book).An internal combustion engine (including a diesel engine) is driven by the combustion of fuel, i.e., by oxidizing fuel using oxygen in the air, under high pressures and high temperatures. The oxidizing process leads to increase in temperature and pressure in the combustion chamber of the engine, and therefore the reaction generates a lot of heat. An engine of this kind can have a large volume, and therefore has a large heat load to be dissipated. In view of this, engine cooling system is generally employed to dissipate the heat generated by the engine. The cooling system usually comprises a coolant circuit, and a heat exchange means in the form of a radiator 570a42141b
