Objectives ========== In scientific research, data visualisation is a key element to support exploration, discovery and best practice. Visualisation has many benefits including the ease of interpretation of information and the immediate feedback it provides. In order to benefit from these additional advantages, researchers may need to perform data visualisation in a variety of different software tools. Even though there is no universal definition of what data visualisation is, it is generally defined as an interactive representation of data that allows for various forms of exploratory data analysis, with the goal of communicating complex information to various audiences. There are many software tools that support data visualisation, including: Tableau, VizGlue, Spotfire, Adobe Illustrator, Microsoft Excel, R and its suite of tools. The most commonly used software tools are Tableau and VizGlue. Each one has its own advantages over the others. The aim of this study is to compare and contrast the interfaces of Tableau and VizGlue in order to identify their similarities and differences. This will aid in the design of future data visualisation tools and ease their implementation into routine research practices. Methods ======= Two Data visualisation experts independently compared the interfaces of the Tableau and VizGlue visualisation tools using a number of criteria. These criteria were initially determined after a literature review. They are: a) usability, b) the ability to connect to the data it holds, c) the ability to generate visualisations, d) the ability to make information available to multiple audiences and e) the ability to do visualisation across multiple datasets. Qualitative data collection was carried out. Results ======= After the initial comparisons the lists of similarities and differences were collated. The Tableau and VizGlue interfaces were then analysed using the data collected on the similarities and differences. A series of thematic analysis were then conducted to compare the features of Tableau and VizGlue. Conclusions ============ Currently, there is not a standard interface that both Tableau and VizGlue have in common. In fact the interfaces are very different, supporting different interactive paradigms. Many of the tools that are similar also support different visualisation types. Many differences can be seen with features such as the ability to adjust interactivity to suit the audience and the ability to do dynamic visualisation of changes. A number of thematic differences also include more power over the visualisation. These help in decision making when working in the science. As technology

Search The majority of retired policemen share the view that benefits should be reviewed and perhaps increased. But almost half (43%) also agree benefits should be cut or reduced, a new poll from ComRes has found. The equivalent ComRes poll for the Public Sector Workers' Union (PSWU) found that 63% of current public servants think there should be no increase in the basic rate of pension for new state employees in 2014/15 and 61% for new federal employees in 2016/17. Derek Beauchamp, pensions officer at PSWU, says: "In the ComRes poll for us, 50% agree on new-generation pensioners not having to pay PRSI, and 81% think a superannuation contribution for the state pension should be scrapped." Beauchamp says in the coming years the union will be "putting pressure on Government as part of the public sector pay campaign" to address these issues. PSWU members have seen their pay rise by around 4% this year. The poll results are not surprising, given the reliance on public sector pensions being squeezed by successive governments. "It has been a steady diet of pension cuts since the first of the year," says Beauchamp. He says that in 2014/15 there will be a 16% cut to superannuation, increasing again in 2016/17. He says in many cases the government is using its employment figures to justify cuts to pensions. "They are finding ways to justify lower and lower pay in an attempt to secure growth in the economy." But he added that retiring public sector workers were a "great asset" to the economy. "They contribute to the country. They help to run hospitals, schools and transport." Some 62% of retired policemen say they would support changes to the state pension. The current pension age is 67, with those aged 55 and over able to retire and at least 20 years on the job. People aged 55 and over can continue to receive the pension until they are 70 years of age. "If you are earning above €20,000 a year, you will not pay PRSI. It's very unfair that younger people pay PRSI on their earnings," says Beauchamp. The ComRes poll found 18% of retired policemen said
