The Gradient tool allows you to make an image transition between two colors or shades. A Gradient Fill is used to create visually interesting backgrounds, such as walls, floors and sky. Whew, that was a lot. Don't worry - we'll get to more advanced effects in just a moment. Let's take a look at some other tools that Photoshop has to offer. The Eraser tool is used to erase parts of an image. It creates an effect similar to placing a stencil over a painted surface. The Clone tool allows you to copy pixels from one area of an image and paste them into another area. It's very useful for fixing scratches, bleeding, or damaged areas in an image. The Sketch tool is used to draw with thin, quick lines that appear to be painted on an image. The Smudge tool can be used to erase areas of an image that are being replaced with new, colored ones. A Smudge Fill is used to create visually interesting backgrounds, such as walls, floors and sky. The Typography features in Photoshop are used to add and adjust text elements. It has text effects such as drop shadows and outlines. What are some of the most common effects? You'll find most of the effects in the Effects menu. Here are a few examples: Effect Type: Blur Effect Type: Distort Effect Type: Dodge and Burn Effect Type: Emboss Effect Type: Stylize Effect Type: Smart Blur Effect Type: Saturation Effect Type: Vibrance Effect Type: Wave 1 Using some of these effects is very easy, as you'll see in the next chapter. You can also create your own custom effects using Photoshop's Actions panel. Where can I get more information? We'll learn all the ins and outs of custom effects in Chapter 2.

Q: mysql sum two groups I have an issue with a query. I have the column payment, that contains numbers. I want to sum total amount and new amount. total amount is sum(payment) new amount is sum(payment)/3. I'm not sure about syntax. A: try this one SELECT sum(payment), sum(payment)/3 FROM your_table

Q: System.Windows.Forms.WebBrowser from a background application I'm using a System.Windows.Forms.WebBrowser object in a C# MVC application. The web application is hosted in a web server on a remote machine, I've not got access to it. I need to download a webpage into the web browser component from a background service in the application. I'd like the site to open in a maximised window so I can resize the window from the application - this works correctly if I use Firefox but not if I use WebBrowser. Any ideas would be much appreciated. A: I found an answer, a bit late but hopefully still relevant. Any idea on how to do this in C# and ASP.NET MVC 5? A: You can do it by the following way, You can use the Multipath TCP to transfer the large files or media streams to the web browser, and get the stream source in the web browser. --Not tested--- var shell = new ApplicationNameShell() { File = FilePath, IconPath = FileIcon, Title = FileTitle, Width = 600, Height = 300, }; shell.Location = new System.Drawing.Point(0, 0); shell.Show();

Convert the string or binary data in the web browser and set the status and update the progress bar. Tested it in memory stream will be as per the disk use maximum size. Integrated circuits are widely used for manufacturing electronic products. The electronic products with integrated circuits generally have higher efficiency and power consumption than those with discrete electronic components. Therefore, it is desirable to reduce the power consumption of integrated circuits. In a typical charge pump circuit, a capacitor is charged by an electronic charge source. The capacitor outputs a voltage. As the capacitor has capacitance. The output voltage thereof tends to be quite stable when the capacitor is properly charged. When the charge in the capacitor decreases, the voltage thereof will fall until the capacitor is adequately charged. When the charge in the capacitor is higher than a critical charge, the voltage of the capacitor will increase to an out of stable output voltage. The charge pump circuit may become unstable if the charge in the capacitor is at the critical charge
