What's New in the CRM 2011 Email Attachment - Sharepoint Archival?

Your CRM email template files (.eml) are now moved to Sharepoint and hosted in a document library with a URL pointing to the document. Email body text, if any, is copied directly from your email template into the Sharepoint document. External sites, URLs, logos, etc. are stored in a sharepoint library and are shared to the template. Email type, address and list (if any) are stored in your DataBase. Several operations that you perform in your Email template editor are now added directly from the Sharepoint document manager. CRM 2011 Email Attachment - Sharepoint Archival is the best CRM module for your CRM list items. How to remove attachments at all CRM 2011 Email Attachment - Sharepoint Archival description: To remove all attachments, go to the Edit or View section of the appropriate list (List Options, New List, Reports, Calendar, Contacts, Sales Order, Tasks, Leads, etc.) and click on Delete All attachments. Then, Click on OK. Q: How to make a division of attributes of a class by columns in C#? I am making a program for an exam, and I've faced a problem. The problem is the following: I have a class named Rat where the attributes are Name, blood, sex, age, and weight. I would like to make a function called 'div' that divides the attributes by columns, for example, if we have an object of a class Rat and we'd like to divide the attributes of the class by columns (i.e., you would have $25/6/2/2=2.5$), we would get the first column only, then the second column, then the third, and so on. I guess the solution would have something to do with arrays and foreach, but I haven't any idea about how to do it. A: You can use Array.Select to do this.
