The on-ball action engine has been revised to best represent a player's actual movements, improving the player's composure on the ball, pass weight, speed and accuracy. In addition, the developers have made adjustments to the ball physics and animation to create more realistic movements and outcomes. Team movements have also been recalibrated to make players and defenders much more responsive to each other in the flow of the game. Additionally, FIFA 22 introduces "Run-and-Shoot" gameplay, which allows players to use their movement to launch a short-range accurate ball into the box, either for a shot on goal or a chip for an attacker to run onto. It is reminiscent of where players used to play in the 1970s and 80s, and the sensation of running towards the ball or a team-mate is reminiscent of playing EA's MVP game series. As in FIFA 19, that means 'Leading Passes' are now used to determine what type of pass you are getting, and it will be the same in FIFA 22 as in FIFA 20. The score line for the computer will also now be dependent on your playing style and the strength of opposition players, which will affect a player's positioning relative to the pass. FIFA 20 introduced "Momentum," which is a short- to medium-term trend affecting player behaviour in close proximity to the ball. The shift in momentum can be caused by several factors, including player positioning, speed of players relative to the ball, the direction and type of the pass and goal scorer. Momentum affects offensive and defensive balance, and can be used by players as they challenge for the ball. A new offensive behaviour system will provide players with a read on their surroundings and opponents' strength, helping to avoid unnecessary challenges, and creating opportunities. The new offensive variables include possession of the ball, distance from goal, and player interactions, including the strength of opposition players, the location of opposing defenders and the location of the ball. EA has worked on the defensive side of the new behaviours as well, taking into account factors like player intelligence, player positioning, teammates and opponents' strength. Factors like situational awareness and player dexterity will also be considered. The new defensive variables include distance to ball, one of the ball-player's closest allies, and type of touch (heavy, light or instant). FIFA 20 introduced AI improvements that give players the ability to read the game

System Requirements:

The SLEEVE had better be large, else there will be too much emptiness to fill up in the paintings. The gabardine backdrop is a must, and paint will be needed to colour them in with the right background colour. Here is a quick guide of what you should use: - A white or lighter colour for the shirt (must be your preferred colour) - Black for the jacket and shoes - Grey or one other darker colour for the backdrop - Scissors - A glue stick - Mod Podge and paper
