Gossypium barbadense cv. Alizade (Adel) and G. hirsutum cv. Coker 312 (Coker) are important cotton varieties in southern Africa. To facilitate cotton breeding, an EST-based genetic linkage map was constructed in Adel based on simple sequence repeat (SSR) markers. In the present study, an EST-based genetic linkage map of 225 SSR markers covering a total distance of 1289.16 cM was developed in Adel using an F2 mapping population. Most of the mapped loci were generated from single unigene sequences. The linkage distances between the EST-based map and the previously published G. hirsutum cv. AN-PX-005 map were compared. The EST-based genetic linkage map developed in Adel is well-integrated with the AN-PX-005 map and is likely to be a useful marker resource for selecting valuable genes in cotton breeding. Furthermore, SSR markers in cotton were mapped for the first time onto chromosomes 4, 5 and 11. This study demonstrated that ESTs are a reliable resource in gene identification. It will facilitate the identification of EST-based quantitative trait loci (QTL) and genetic linkage maps and also provide information for cotton molecular breeding.{% extends "old e79caf774b
