This invention relates to a method and apparatus for producing fluid by use of a turbine, and more particularly to such a method and apparatus for producing fluid by means of a turbine having a shaft. There is previously known a so-called turbine-steam driven apparatus for producing fluid, e.g. water, wherein the fluid is guided along a common path through a turbine and thereafter the water is divided into a plurality of outlets through a water-divider, such as a bubbler (see, for instance, Japanese Utility Model Laid-Open Publish No. Sho 50-56081). In such an apparatus, the fluid is guided through a turbine having a hollow shaft and is thereafter divided into a plurality of outlets through a water-divider such as a bubbler. However, the turbine of the prior art necessitates a plurality of posts in order to extend the shaft to form a plurality of turbine blades. It is, therefore, difficult to increase the capacity of the apparatus. In order to increase the capacity of the turbine of the type described above, there may be provided another turbine spaced from the first one. However, in this case, a large installation space is required, and a plurality of pumps must be provided. In view of the above-described status of the art, it is an object of the present invention to provide a method for producing fluid by use of a turbine wherein it is possible to increase the capacity of the apparatus. Another object of the present invention is to provide a method for producing fluid by use of a turbine wherein the capacity of the apparatus can be increased without requiring a large installation space.
