It is the actual monetary value of the promise and represents the promisee's interest in the promise. Even if a promise made by a priest or a governmental official is not legally enforceable, it still has a value, just as money in the bank has an objective value even though it may not be deemed to be legal tender. The reason for this is that money exists as an exchange medium and provides the means for settling claims in a state of freedom. A promise by a judge is legally enforceable in the secular legal system because the judge has been given authority over the person of a person who has entered into a contract, thereby making the person's body an exchangeable good, as explained in Shabbos 131b."What's that, Whittaker?" I asked. "Whittaker?" he repeated. "Did I say anything?" he added. "You didn't say anything", I said. "You said 'That's a nice wine, Whittaker'", he added. "How did you know my name?" I asked. "I know all your cards," he responded. "Really?" I asked. "Yes, really", he said.
