Q: How can I extract a value from a text file? I have to write a PHP script that reads a text file and extracts the string value from the first line that begins with "next " so that the user doesn't have to input the name of the next problem to solve. The program has to read up to the first "next " that will match the current user's input. So for example if the user input: next. next. next. next. The program will read to the first "next. " (4th line) and save it in the variable $input. How can I do this? Thanks in advance. A: The following function will do it, but you need to keep in mind it's very fragile. function getInput(){ // Read through the entire file, or just the line you want. $fp = fopen("input.txt", "r"); $line = fgets($fp); // Locate the next 'next.'. while(false!== $peek = strpos($line, "next.")){ $line = fgets($fp); if($peek === false){ return $line; } } } Hugh Barker (footballer) Hugh Barker (born 28 October 1959) is a former Welsh international footballer who is the manager of Bala Town. Playing career Barker began his career with Swansea City in 1978, but after a loan spell with Bangor City he was released in 1982. He had played for several local Welsh football clubs in the Caerphilly area before signing for Caerau. International career Barker won 8 caps for Wales while at Caerau. Coaching career Barker joined Cardiff City as youth coach in 1986. He later coached at Cardiff City, Cardiff Met, Arsenal, Barnsley, Nuneaton Borough, Bangor City and Caerphilly Borough. Barker returned to Cardiff Met in 2002 and was head of the academy until 2006. He later joined Newport County as youth coach, before moving to the coaching staff at Cardiff City

The FCC and CCA will hold a joint conference regarding the FCC's reclassification of various radio frequency services on October 25. The conference will be held in the CCA's Lisle, Illinois, office, and will include discussions of whether the FCC and CCA should take any action regarding the agency's plan to reclassify broadband services as broadband services. The IEEE has also announced that it will hold its own open conference regarding the FCC's broadband data services reclassification proposal on October 26 in Las Vegas. Q: Use MD5 to compare file content I am interested in combining MD5 hashing with Comparing files for content comparison in a software(in C#). The reason I am putting this here is I have a software that will read its output data from database, and I need to compare this data with a list of files stored in a directory. Problem The file comparison has to work without changing the data in the database or software itself(that will be used to read the data from database). So, the C# code will have to compare the data with a list of files. If the data matches the file content then the software should consider the data as OK, but if there is a difference then the software should consider that data as faulty. More Info Basically, when we store data in database, we hash the data before storing the data to the database. The data will be fetched from database, and as well as comparing with the files in a directory, it needs to compare with the data stored in database. I am more interested in hashing, but I am pretty sure I will be using MD5 in the end. I am willing to go ahead with any other hashing algorithm if it can solve the problem. I am planning to implement this solution with C#. I will be using Windows for this solution. A: MD5 has some problems on binary data, and possibly more problems on data stored in the database. Take a look at sha1 to see if it suits your needs. If you can't use md5/sha1, are your data values in the database fixed length binary values? You might be able to get away with just setting the MD5 field in the database to the fixed string value. Or if you don't know that you want MD5, you can always hash the data and store it in a field (as a string) anyway. Clonal
