Manual for the CD-R Command Pack.The China tariffs have inspired another wave of creative trade-busters, this time with companies sending their products to Hong Kong and then the Chinese city of Wuhan, where the novel coronavirus has yet to spread — and may never. The Herald, the flagship of Australian media company News Corp, is pulling off a blockade of its own, announcing today that it is shifting its content production to Beijing. The move isn't a stunt. Instead, it is the start of a new era for the paper, which moved from Melbourne to Sydney in December 2017. Today's Herald Sydney Morning Herald reports: "News Corp's businesses have been scrambling to ensure that their coronavirus content will be protected in the event that China's COVID-19 outbreak spreads to the rest of the world. This includes taking their content out of Wuhan — where the virus emerged in December — to copy editors and graphic artists in Shanghai. 'We are ensuring a quality finish that Australia can be proud of' says a News Corp source." Today, when a reporter on the ground noted that the coronavirus may never spread to Australia, a News Corp employee replied, "We are being cautious, but we still operate on the understanding that Wuhan will be the epicentre of this outbreak." The Herald also noted that the move comes amid threats from the Trump administration that it will impose tariffs on Chinese imports. "This is all about weathering the coming storm," the Herald reported. For Australian media companies, the coronavirus market is so important that the Sydney Morning Herald has set aside $
