Invention The present invention relates to a vehicle control apparatus that performs vehicle control such as an automatic transmission gear shift. 2. Description of the Prior Art Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open No. 2008-186323 discloses a conventional vehicle control apparatus that performs automatic gear shift control.

This vehicle control apparatus detects a gear shift operation mode (gear shift mode) in response to a gear shift operation by the driver, and controls the automatic transmission based on an operation mode established in association with the detected gear shift operation mode.

However, the conventional vehicle control apparatus disclosed in Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open No.

2008-186323 needs to perform control for re-establishment of an operation mode upon the occurrence of the above-mentioned gear shift operation, i.e., control for re-establishment of the gear shift mode. This may result in unnecessary use of a brake and engine. In view of the above, there is a need to provide a vehicle control apparatus that can efficiently perform vehicle control such as gear shift control without occurrence of unnecessary use of a brake and engine. From in vitro to in vivo studies on the cellular and biochemical effects of controlled release diltiazem in blood vessels. Calcium antagonists such as diltiazem are important drugs in hypertension treatment. However, in some patients, their blood pressure lowering effects diminish when treatment is switched from the antihypertensive agent alone to the combination of a calcium antagonist and a beta-blocker.

This may be due to the peak-effect blood pressure lowering of the antihypertensive agent and the unwanted side-effect, tachycardia, of the beta-blocker. However, the addition of a beta-blocker may result in either a loss of blood pressure lowering or an increase in pulse rate, depending on the patient's cardiovascular condition.

Therefore, the optimal combination therapy for hypertension treatment would be the combination of the maximum dose of antihypertensive agent with a minimum dose of beta-blocker. For this, there must be a drug delivery system capable of providing a constant plasma concentration of the antihypertensive agent as well as a minimum pulse rate. Therefore,
