Half-German, half-Japanese, astronaut Dr. I promised I'd do something with my new embroidery pattern, and I thought I'd make a hat to go with it. I love my patterns, but if you're using a pattern for the first time, you need to make sure it fits your head. I had to do a bit of simplifying to get this hat to fit my head, but I am so happy with how it turned out. I just followed the instructions for the dress: Template, template, template You'll notice that I'm using an actual dress as my template. Sewing on a new dress is much faster than using a circle or rectangle, and it's easier to make adjustments to the pattern at this stage. My head isn't quite that size, so I took the top of the dress and bottom of the dress and added them together. I also took the dress in half at the shoulders and back waist and redid the front and back by adding the top half and the bottom half of the dress together. I took the upper-left and upper-right sections of the front and back of the dress and folded them in half. I cut them into thirds and sewed the ends together to create more darts. A view from above. You can't really see it, but there are four darts in the upper left and right. Looking at the lower section of the same front and back, I sewed them together so that the darts were at the front of the neckline and the armholes. Two more darts were created at the bottom of the arms. Finally, I sewed up the cape at the back
