DataCard is a replacement for the standard ID badge or token. A high security encrypted data card with smart card functionality that can be used to unlock systems, access system accounts or perform other functions. DataCard includes the RFID reader, the real time clock, keys and the middleware that allows you to communicate with a computer. The middleware contains the encryption, cryptography, message protocol, message parser and sample usage. Infineon provides a PIN to DataCard interface. The PIN allows a DataCard to be locked and unlocked using a PIN number only. The PIN is a simple 16 bit binary number that identifies the DataCard, and must be between 00 and FF. The PIN is not a password or secret in the traditional sense. A PIN simply requires that you remember it. If we define Datacard as a smartcard which is not associated with a userid, the same can be said for an ordinary smartcard. The secret of the PIN is the master key and the key is hidden from most people. A: Yubico OTPs are the most secure way to generate passwords. No human has ever memorized the first 6 characters in a Yubico OTP. If someone is able to intercept it it's automatically changed. On the other hand, a Yubico OTP has some flaws in comparison to another type of OTP. The Yubico OTP only works if you own a Yubico Yubikey. Second, it only works if you're using the Yubico Yubikey. Mobile phones that have the NFC chip may not be able to use a Yubico OTP. Lastly, if a Yubikey is lost, the OTP is invalid. As the Yubico Yubikey is the most expensive security key, consider if the security key is really worth the money if you lose it.
