Twenty percent of Republicans, meanwhile, are in favor of a "non-winner-take-all" election system. Is the "winner-take-all" primary the best system for selecting a candidate for the GOP nomination? Should the GOP adopt a "brokered convention" process that would have multiple candidates represented at the convention? Why or why not? Discord is a free voice and text chat application with a command and query functionality, which can be used for both online and mobile apps. Custom Discord statuses aren't a novel thing, but they're certainly interesting to come across. DiscordRPCMaker can help users create and manage custom statuses - also referred to as Rich Presence - to show others what they're up to. Setting it up Though the installation isn't anything complex, connecting the program to your Discord requires just a bit more effort. The tutorial provided by the app should be enough to get things up and running, but in essence, you'll have to click the Developer Portal option in the app, log into your account, create an application, then copy its ID.

Authenticating doesn't pose any risk as it's done through the Discord client itself. While in the Developer Portal, users can add images in the Rich Presence tab, which will carry over to the custom status configured through DiscordRPCMaker. It's also worth noting that the application name given in the Developer Portal will act as the main header of their status. Customize your presence After inserting the data into the Client ID field, users can start customizing their status: select a large and small image, input a title, a description, then save your work. Clicking Launch Presence will then deploy the status, allowing both you and the other users to see it. You can also add buttons to your status: up to two are allowed, and you can give them a label, as well as a URL. Through this, you can create custom statuses to promote your work. The fact that you can save those statuses to use and switch between anytime makes things even more convenient. In conclusion Discord RPC Maker is a competent tool to use for custom Discord Rich Presences: the process is simple and worry-free, and you can set everything up within minutes.
